Long live the train!

It's not long now until your journey abroad. Are you still undecided about which means of transport to use? We'd like to help you make the decision with the following arguments.

Travelling by train has many positive aspects...

...and saves you from a flight

Straight from the platform to your seat

Repeated long queues and covering kilometres on foot through gigantic terminals in between

All the luggage you can carry

One gram too much and you risk a charge of EUR 50

Time for productive work in the quiet compartment from the first minute on, usually with free Wi-Fi (and a power socket!)

Flight mode on and off and on and off... and always the requirement to stow the devices under the seat or somewhere you can't get to quickly during the flight. What happens if there's turbulence?!

And in any case, you only get a USB port if it's your lucky day. Free Wi-Fi? Nope

Option of holding meetings in small groups in the compartment or just spend the time picturing all that the stay abroad will have to offer

Having to do all sorts of contortions to be able to speak quietly to the person in the row behind you

The best thing: being able to bring a full water bottle with no size limit – nothing to stop you enjoying a picnic or drinks

Decanting all the soaps and drinks into small containers – spilling half most likely

Watch the landscape passing by – see where the journey is taking you

Okay, being above the clouds is nice too. On the other hand, the sky looks the same everywhere

Arrival (mostly) right in the city centre

Taking an expensive taxi or using public transport (which involves an odyssey through the suburbs)
